In September 1983, began the delivery of F-16 AIM-9P under a contract named Puma Delta, were delivered to the 16th Fighter Group "Dragones" (Dragons) at El Libertador Air Base, near Palo Negro. In early 1990s were replaced with the newer AIM-9L Sidewinder missiles. On 27 November 1992, the dragons participated in a coup d'état against President Carlos Andrés Borge. Rebels forces took several military installations, two F-16s escaped from El Libertador Air Base and landed in the Requisimonte Air Base. The Dragones shot down two rebel (WR) Broncos with their 20 mm cannons.

In October 1997, the US Congress sold two former F-16B Fighting Falcons as well as to provide a Mid-Life Update (MLU), but political tensions with the government of Colonel Hugo Chávez made the MLU were not approved by US Government. The Venezuelan Dragones obtained enhancement of weapons and systems from Israel. This included a DASH helmet, Python 4 air-to-air missiles, Rafael Litening targeting pods, Ullara RWR, and a new MFD. Other upgrades were cancelled by Israel due US pressure. The F-16 will continue in service with the FAV until 2020, or as far as US-provided spares allow.
